Penetration Testing

Our penetration testers are some of the most revered in the industry and are at the forefront of new testing techniques.

Penetration testing is a safe imitation of a hacker attack to prevent them in the future. The test has lots of variations. But the main criterion is that the hacker is aware of the attacked object.

Depending on the degree of his awareness, there may be one of the following techniques:

This whitepaper provides an overview of CozyDuke, a set of tools used by one or more malicious actors for performing targeted attacks against high profile organizations, such as governmental organizations and other entities that work closely with these institutions.

The CozyDuke toolset, which we believe has been under active development since at least 2011, consists of tools for infecting targeted hosts, establishing and maintaining backdoor access to the hosts, gathering information from them and gaining further access to other hosts inside the victim organization.

Based on command and control (C&C) server information found being used by CozyDuke tools, we believe the CozyDuke toolset is used by at least one malicious actor who also uses, or at the least shares, infrastructure with actors using the known threats, MiniDuke and OnionDuke.

A top-down view of a car, likely a sports car, parked on a paved surface. The car's body is covered in a dense pattern of small, light blue skulls and stars on a darker blue background. A prominent emblem is located on the front of the hood, featuring a larger skull with wings and three stars above it. The car's windshield is visible, reflecting the sky. The car is positioned between two white lines on the pavement.

Military Computer Attack Confirmed

By BRIAN KNOWLTON

Published: August 25, 2010

WASHINGTON — A top Pentagon official has confirmed a previously classified incident that he describes as “the most significant breach of U.S. military computers ever,” a 2008 episode in which a foreign intelligence agent used a flash drive to infect computers, including those used by the Central Command in overseeing combat zones in Iraq and Afghanistan.

Plugging the cigarette-lighter-sized flash drive into an American military laptop at a base in the Middle East amounted to “a digital beachhead, from which data could be transferred to servers under foreign control,” according to William J. Lynn 3d, deputy secretary of defense, writing in the latest issue of the journal Foreign Affairs.

“It was a network administrator’s worst fear: a rogue program operating silently, poised to deliver operational plans into the hands of an unknown adversary,” Mr. Lynn wrote.
